2025 Market Snapshot: The Real Estate Market Doesn't Have to be so "Tough"

Gina Bartolacelli, Realtor®

Over this past year, the news has been filled with salacious headlines about our economy, high interest rates, buyer fatigue, and even the most beautiful listings can take longer to sell.

It can be easy to get caught up in the hype that we are in a downward spiral, but the truth is, our hyper-local market, Marinwood, Lucas Valley, Mont Marin, Terra Linda, even zoomed out to the greater Bay Area, is actually doing quite well based on year-over-year sales.

What we actually experience time again during economic uncertainty is resiliency and an ever upward (albeit at times wobbly) trend for single-family homes in our local market. There is still strong demand for well-priced homes—especially in peaceful neighborhoods with fabulous amenities, quaint rolling hills, amazing weather, great schools, and good, kind people... Yes I'm talking about you!

Accurate, information about what's going on in your neighborhood may not be all over the 6:00 News, but it can still be just as accessible! Housing will always be necessary and many buyers are motivated and ready to make moves for the right home. The glass is still half full.

Reach out anytime for a market analysis, or a friendly conversation.

A Salute to Our "Firstest Responders"

Running an outdoor summer camp that serves over 500 kids a day comes with its share of minor injuries. Bumps, bruises, and bee stings. Cuts, scrapes, and bloody noses. Splinters, lost teeth, and stubbed toes. On any given day it's not unusual to see a camper in the lobby or down at the pool desk receiving an ice pack, band-aid, or sting-relief-swab. And while it's always heartbreaking to see one of our campers in distress, watching our camp staff give them the care they need can be heartwarming, too.

Just as some unlucky summer campers become minor First Aid patients, so also do our summer camp counselors and lifeguards become temporary medics, springing into action when injuries strike. It can be an abrupt shift—one minute they are casually demonstrating how to make a friendship bracelet, the next they are delicately removing a bee stinger from a crying child's toe, simultaneously trying to keep the child calm and comforted while watching for signs of allergic reaction.

These situations demand professionalism, selflessness, and the execution of multifaceted skills, and tend to reveal the true mettle of a staff member. One can't help feeling proud and inspired watching a typically goofy teenager suddenly rise to the occasion and snap into "First Responder Mode." And at times like these, First Responders are just what our summer camp counselors and lifeguards are.

Now sometimes bigger injuries occur at summer camp that necessitate bringing out the more professional, full-time First Responders, like firefighters, EMTs, and paramedics. In these instances, our camp staff will provide whatever First Aid care they can until the professionals arrive, at which point they gratefully hand off the First Aid baton. In this way our summer camp staff could be considered sort of "Pre-First Responders" or "Firstest Responders," on the scene before anyone else. (Those terms haven't entirely caught on in the industry yet, but I'm working on it.)

My own 3 boys had their share of bumps and bruises at camp this summer. (My 5-year-old's broken arm happened at home, but I know he would have received stellar care if it had been at camp!) Their scads of band-aids, scabs, and scars still polka dotting their arms and legs are not just badges of honor from an active and adventurous summer, but also reminders of all the nurturing and professional First Aid care they received from their incredible summer camp staff—the "Firstest Responders," dutifully snapping into action.

And then resuming the dodgeball game.

WATERCOLOR WORKSHOP

Ages Adults 15+

In this one-day workshop, you will spend the morning learning all about the fundamentals of painting with watercolor. Transparent watercolor is different from all other media and as such has some quite different aspects about how it is used. We'll cover the materials used with watercolor, the ways that we apply watercolor to (its very particular) paper, color theory and color mixing, what a classic palette of colors is. We'll discuss the importance of drawing (and drawing directly with the brush) as well as values and design/composition. We'll stop for a half hour lunch break (bring your lunch), during which we'll discuss the incredible history of watercolor painting in California. In the afternoon, we'll work together step by step to make a watercolor painting.

Each student should come to class with one sheet of Arches 140lb. Cold Press watercolor paper (approx. $10). Paints, palettes and brushes will be available.

Students will leave this workshop with a good grounding in how to work with this wonderful medium and a painting of their own!

Instructor: Michael Friedland

Please check website for dates and fees.

Hi I'm Kevin Kearney.

I'm a real estate broker serving Marin County, and I recently found myself having to learn about the issues around setting up my mother's estate due to her diagnosis of Alzheimer's. That entailed every step from handling the trust, and moving her into a nursing home, to selling her house.

I'd like to take this opportunity to help you, by sharing all that I learned while helping my Mom.

View the workshop descriptions below and scan the QR code to visit my website for more information.
